

Health of OLDER PEOPLE
e-resource

As our POPULATION AGES  and the  becomes a more complicated place, the need for health services for older people and the HEALTH of older people in general is greater  than ever.

To work effectively in this expanding clinical field you need access to the latest knowledge and expertise, and a way to develop new skills and gain practical experience.

The e-resource offers you a new and innovative way of learning what you need to know to practise successfully.

It's a web-based tool that gives you access to up-to-date information about the health issues and the aging process affecting your clients and their family/whānau.

For staff  working in these services it provides an overview of the competency framework and suggests ways you can develop the required competencies.

Leader

Practitioner

Essential

In the workplace most learning happens informally. We've designed the e-resource around on-the-job learning activities. You can keep a record of your learning in a printable journal to form part of your professional development portfolio and on-going registration.

Discuss what you're learning and get feedback from a coach  then go and apply your learning on the job.

The e-resource caters for all levels of competency. This means you've got a learning pathway to follow and the resources you need to make the journey. The essential level focused on helping temporary or permanent staff identify and gain the competencies to work with older people.

The practitioner level can help clinicians who have been working for some time to identify and/or update their clinical knowledge and skills.

The leader level helps you lead and develop the skills of other clinicians.

Because the e-resource can be freely accessed by all staff as well as service users, family/whānau and carers, you can use it to share clinical information and empower service users.

Plus, you can use the e-resource to work alongside your clients to identify best-practice holistic treatments.
